Democrats Call For Investigation Of $300 Million Contract For Firm With Ties To Zinke.

There was significant coverage of Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke's ties to an small company from his hometown that was awarded a major contract to help restore power to Puerto Rico's power grid. ABC World News Tonight (10/24, story 7, 2:10, Muir) reported a "Montana company [was] given the contract to get the power back on" in Puerto Rico "with just two workers when it landed that contract." ABC (Thomas) added, "Whitefish Energy, a private Montana company with just two full-time employees, awarded a $300 million contract by the Puerto Rico Electric Power Authority. The company showcasing its work on Twitter," but "some Democrats are already calling for an investigation into that contract" to Whitefish Energy – a firm from the "hometown of Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke."

The Washington Post (10/23, A1, Mufson, Gillum, Davis, Hernández) first reported the story which said that the company had "only two full-time employees on the day Hurricane Maria hit Puerto Rico." Whitefish Energy "signed the contract...with the Puerto Rico Electric Power Authority (PREPA) to fix the island's electrical infrastructure." The company "has 280 workers on the island...a majority of whom are subcontractors." Former DOE official Susan Tierney said, "The fact that there are so many utilities with experience in this and a huge track record of helping each other out, it is at least odd why [the utility] would go to Whitefish. ... I'm scratching my head wondering how it all adds up."

The AP (10/24, Daly) reports the Interior Department "denied that Zinke, a former Montana congressman, played any role in the contract award. Zinke's son had a summer job at a Whitefish construction side." The department said in a statement, "Neither the secretary nor anyone in his office have taken any meetings or action on behalf of this company." Furthermore, the statement said Zinke knows Whitefish CEO Andy Techmanskis "because they both live in a small town where everyone knows everyone." Techmanskis visited Puerto Rico on vacation in late summer "and established contact with PREPA and discussed potential future work, company spokesman Chris Chiames said Tuesday. When Maria hit Sept. 20, Whitefish was one of the companies that power authority officials were able to reach by satellite phone." Chiames said in a telephone interview, "We got here quicker than anybody else and we built a plan that PREPA had confidence in."

PREPA's executive director Ricardo Ramos told reporters that Whitefish was the first company "available to arrive, and they were the ones that first accepted terms and conditions for PREPA," according to the AP (10/24, Daly). Ramos added, "The doubts that have been raised about Whitefish, from my point of view, are completely unfounded." NPR (10/24, Ouellet) reports Ramos explained Whitefish's selection was a matter of timing and convenience. He told NPR, "We knew there was going to be a direct hit, so we wanted as much resources as possible." He said Whitefish's name "popped up on several fronts." According to Ramos, PREPA received bids from several companies in the period between Hurricane Irma and Hurricane Maria. PREPA shortlisted two companies, including Whitefish. He also pointed out Whitefish did not ask for a payment guarantee, and it was awarded the PREPA contract. NBC Nightly News  (10/24, story 6, 1:50, Gutierrez) showed Ken Luce, a Whitefish Energy spokesperson, defending the company by saying, "Others were just not willing to take the risk and get on a plane to go ask for business."

The New York Times (10/24, Acosta, Healy) reports "the House Committee on Natural Resources said on Tuesday that it was looking into the contract." Parish Braden, the panel's communications director, "said that members of the panel would travel to Puerto Rico this week to seek more answers about the details of the contract and how it was reached." Moreover, "Sen. Maria Cantwell, Democrat of Washington, asked the Government Accountability Office to investigate the circumstances surrounding Whitefish's contract."

The AP (10/24, Daly) reports Rep. Raul Grijalva of Arizona, senior Democrat on the House Natural Resources Committee, said Tuesday that "Congress needs to understand why the Whitefish contract was awarded and whether other, more cost-effective options were available." Grijalva said lawmakers also need to understand why the Federal Emergency Management Agency, the Army Corps of Engineers and public sector utilities "failed in Puerto Rico to conduct the disaster-response planning they carried out ahead of other disasters this year" in Texas, Florida and other states.

In a statement to ABC News (10/24, Dooley, Ebbs, Hoyos), Democratic Rep. Luis Gutierrez of Illinois added, "There is something very fishy about the Whitefish deal. I have been here 25 years and this doesn't pass the smell test." In contrast to such skepticism, Sen. Marco Rubio (R-FL) said Whitefish "showed up at the right place at the right time and that's how they got the contract." Rubio added, "We want to see restoration pick up. Every day that they're without power is a day that economy isn't functioning and it's another day people are suffering."

WPost: Contract "Deserving Of More Scrutiny."

The Washington Post (10/24) editorializes that in contrast to the situation in Texas and Florida, “more than a month after Maria made landfall on” Puerto Rico “roughly 8 out of 10 residents are still without power.” While “the sorry, preexisting state of Puerto Rico’s power system...clearly accounts for some of the delay...that doesn’t excuse the bad planning and questionable decisions that have marked the response to a calamity that was so clearly anticipated.” To the Post, “giving a no-bid $300 million contract to a company that had just two full-time employees on the day Maria struck is, at best, curious and deserving of more scrutiny.”

Governor Slams Army Corps Of Engineers. ☐

NBC Nightly News (10/24, story 6, 1:50, Gutierrez) reported that amid the continuing power outages, Puerto Rico’s governor “slammed the Army Corps of Engineers’ response so far.” Gov. Ricardo Rosselló was shown saying, “There’s no sense of urgency.” NBC added, “The Army Corps insists it’s working hard to meet the governor’s goal to restoring power to 95 percent of the island by mid-December.”

Interior Proposes Raising Fees At Popular National Parks.

The Hill (10/24, Henry) reports the Interior Department is considering higher peak-season fees at 17 of its most popular national parks “during their busiest five-month periods.” The agency said the increased fees would “help ensure that they are protected and preserved in perpetuity and that visitors enjoy a world-class experience that mirrors the amazing destinations they are visiting.” In a statement, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke said, “The infrastructure of our national parks is aging and in need of renovation and restoration.” Zinke added, “We need to have the vision to look at the future of our parks and take action in order to ensure that our grandkids’ grandkids will have the same if not better experience than we have today. Shoring up our parks’ aging infrastructure will do that.” President Trump proposed trimming the National Park Service’s budget by 12.9 percent this year, “despite concerns from officials with the department and in Congress about the state of the Park Service’s infrastructure.”

The AP (10/24, Fonseca) reports visitors to the Grand Canyon, Yosemite, Yellowstone, and other popular parks “would be charged $70 per vehicle, up from the fee of $30 for a weekly pass. At others, the hike is nearly triple, from $25 to $70.” The National Park Service estimates it will raise $70 million a year with the proposal “at a time when national parks repeatedly have been breaking visitation records and putting a strain on park resources.” According to the AP, the proposal would not affect selected free weekends and holidays at parks throughout the year.

The Los Angeles Times (10/24, Martin) reports NPS will accept public comment on the proposal until Nov. 23 at its public comment website. The proposal could go into effect as early as next spring. It would also increase fees for commercial vehicles entering the parks. Money (10/24, Calfas) reports NPS has not “proposed any price increases for its America the Beautiful passes, which are $80 and grant access to more than 2,000 federal sites, including those potentially getting a comparable price tag for just one visit.”

The Huffington Post (10/24) reports Democrats were “quick to slam the park free proposal.” Rep. Raúl Grijalva (D-AZ), the ranking member of the House Natural Resources Committee, said in a statement, “We should be encouraging more people to get outdoors and enjoy our great natural wonders instead of discouraging them by raising park entrance fees.” Meanwhile, Sen. Maria Cantwell (D-WA) said in a statement, “While Secretary Zinke flies around on private jets using our taxpayer dollars, he is hiking up the fees all American families pay to enjoy our National Parks.”

Trump To Auction Off A Vast Swath Of The Gulf Of Mexico To Oil Companies.

The Washington Post (10/24, Fears) reports the Trump Administration “made history Tuesday in proposing that nearly 77 million acres in the Gulf of Mexico be made available for companies wanting to purchase federal oil and gas leases – the largest offering ever in the United States.” The Post adds that “in announcing the sale, the Interior Department compared the targeted waters to ‘about the size of New Mexico’ and said the first lease sales off Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama and Florida are scheduled for March next year.” The Bureau of Ocean Energy Management (BOEM) “offered assurances that the environment would be protected as additional leases are sold in the gulf.” Vincent DeVito, Interior’s counselor for energy policy, touted the benefits of the sale, saying, “People need jobs, the Gulf Coast states need revenue, and Americans do not want to be dependent on foreign oil.” According to the Post, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “first broached such a sale shortly after he took office in March, proposing to offer 73 million acres for leases.”

The Washington Times (10/24, Wolfgang) reports Zinke “announced the massive lease sale, slated for March 2018, on Tuesday morning, and said the move is a key component of the administration’s effort to tap US energy reserves and reap the economic benefits that come along with them.” Said Zinke, “In today’s low-price energy environment, providing the offshore industry access to the maximum amount of opportunities possible is part of our strategy to spur local and regional economic dynamism and job creation and a pillar of President Trump’s plan to make the United States energy dominant.”

The AP (10/24, Daly) reports the sale “includes all available unleased areas on the Gulf’s Outer Continental Shelf, a reflection of the Trump administration’s strategy to maximize oil and gas drilling on federal lands and waters.” Nevertheless, only a few of the available tracts are expected to receive bids. “A similar lease sale in August drew bids on just 90 offshore tracts totaling about a half-million acres – less than 1 percent of the 76 million acres available,” the AP said. The proposed sale sparked criticism from Rep. Raul Grijalva of Arizona, the top Democrat on the House Natural Resources Committee, who “said Zinke and congressional Republicans were taking credit for an Obama-era policy to offer oil and gas leases from all available tracts in the Gulf, rather than separating the western and eastern Gulf areas from the more productive” central Gulf region.

According to the Houston \(TX\) Chronicle (10/24), “Many Gulf coast lawmakers and political leaders praised the new lease sale.” Reuters (10/24) reports BOEM spokesman John Filostrat said, “We’re hoping to get a healthy number of bids, more so than we did in August.”

Also covering this story are the Washington \(DC\) Examiner (10/24, Siegel), Rigzone (10/24, Veazey) and Offshore Magazine (10/24). Alaska Senators Tell Trump Not To Change Name Of Mountain.

In continuing coverage, The Hill (10/24, Anapol) reports on Alaska Sen. Dan Sullivan (R) recalling during a speech at the Alaska Federation of Natives’ annual conference that during a meeting in March with Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke, President Trump offered to reverse the Obama-era order that changed the name of Mt. McKinley to Denali. According to the Alaska Dispatch News, Sullivan said of Trump, “He looked at me and said, ‘I heard that the big mountain in Alaska also had – also its name was changed by executive action. Do you want us to reverse that?’” Sullivan said he and fellow Alaska Sen. Lisa Murkowski (R) “jumped over the desk” and told the president, “No! No. Don’t want to reverse that.”

The AP (10/24) reports Alaska spent decades trying to get North America’s tallest mountain recognized as Denali, an Athabascan word meaning “the high one,” which Alaskans widely used. As a presidential candidate, Trump tweeted his displeasure with then-Interior Secretary Sally Jewell issuing an order in 2015 ordering the name change.

Government Accountability Office Says Climate Change Already Costing U.S. Billions.

The Associated Press (10/24, Biesecker) reports a Government Accountability Report released Monday said climate change is costing US taxpayers billions of dollars each year, “with those costs expected to rise as devastating storms, floods, wildfires and droughts become more frequent in the coming decades.” The report found “the federal government has spent more than $350 billion over the last decade on disaster assistance programs and losses from flood and crop insurance,” a figure that does not include the “massive toll from this year’s wildfires and three major hurricanes, expected to be among the most costly in the nation’s history.” The authors “reviewed 30 government and academic studies examining the national and regional impacts of climate change” and also “interviewed 28 experts familiar with the strengths and limitations of the studies, which rely on future projections of climate impacts to estimate likely costs.” The AP mentions that President Trump, EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke and Energy Secretary Rick Perry “question the scientific consensus that carbon released into the atmosphere from burning fossil fuels is the primary driver of global warming.”

Congressional Democrats Want Probe Of Delta Tunnels Project.

The AP (10/24) reports five Congressional Democrats from California and one Arizona Democrat on Tuesday requested a new federal probe of Gov. Jerry Brown’s $16 billion proposal to build two giant water tunnels. The request followed a federal audit that “found that the U.S. Interior Department improperly used taxpayer money to help fund planning for the project." The Democrats are asking the US General Accounting Office "to determine whether that funding was legal."

Can Solar Save A Huge Coal Plant? Zinke's Thinking About It.

E&E Publishing (10/24, Patterson, Storrow) reports Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke met with South African billionaire Dr. Patrick Soon-Shiong and two members of his company, NantWorks, to discuss the possibility of using high-powered solar technology at the Navajo Generation Station, one of America's largest coal plants, "as the Trump administration searches for a way to keep the facility from closing." The northeast Arizona facility is "scheduled to retire in 2019 after four utilities with a stake in the facility voted to close it earlier this year." The Interior Department is a minor owner in the plant, which the Trump Administration opposes shuttering. According to the article, Zinke's meeting "appeared to catch some of the administration's allies off guard." For example, the "economies of the Navajo and Hopi tribes are heavily reliant on the coal industry, and tribal leaders have loudly opposed plans to close NGS." In an email, Interior spokeswoman Heather Swift wrote that the department is interested "in an economic pathway where NGS operates post-2019."

Ryan Zinke's Ties To 'Scam PAC' Being Scrutinized By GOP.

The Washington Examiner (10/24, Siegel, Siciliano) reports that Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke "has helped raise money for political operatives in Washington that conservatives are now accusing of misleading donors, Politico reported Tuesday." The report found Zinke "has donated to groups linked to Scott Mackenzie," who runs a Virgin Islands GOP political action committee that hosted Zinke at a fundraiser in March. The Politico investigation found many Republicans have distanced themselves from Mackenzie "because critics say he operates 'scam PACs' that generate small donations from conservative voters, and spend the money on overhead and consultants." For example, Republican Texas Rep. Will Hurd said many of Mackenzie's firms "are preying on seniors." According to the Examiner, there is no evidence linking Zinke's relationship with Mackenzie to anything illegal, "but the relationship with the consultants and PACs is raising eyebrows, Politico reports."

Event To Feature Deputy Interior Secretary.

The Grand Junction \(CO\) Business Times (10/24) reports the Grand Junction Petroleum and Mining Club is hosting a presentation featuring Kate MacGregor, deputy assistant secretary for land and minerals management at the Department of the Interior, Nov. 15. According to the article, McGregor's presentation is titled, "The Department of the Interior's Role in Energy Dominance."

Iron Eyes To Ask For Necessity Defense In DAPL Case

. The Bismarck \(ND\) Tribune (10/24, Dura) reports that a Standing Rock Sioux tribe member Chase Iron Eyes was charged with a felony for inciting a riot and a misdemeanor for criminal trespass, to which, he will be raising the necessity defense on November 3. Chase Iron Eyes is an attorney himself and was a candidate for the US House in 2016. Iron Eyes said "given the Dakota Access Pipeline's imminent threat to my tribe's and my family's only water supply, I ultimately had no choice but to resist on the front lines." The Bismarck Tribune adds that "Iron Eyes faces up to five years in prison, if convicted. He is scheduled for a felony jury trial on Feb. 8."

The Minneapolis Star Tribune (10/24, Nicholson, Karnowski) reports that "an American Indian activist and former U.S. congressional candidate in North Dakota accused of inciting a riot during protests against the Dakota Access oil pipeline says he'll seek to present a "necessity defense" — justifying a crime by arguing it prevented a greater harm."

Lawsuit Filed To Block County Board Of Supervisors' Approval Of Camp 4 Agreement.

The Lompoc \(CA\) Record (10/24, Hodgson) reports a Santa Ynez Valley ranch "filed a complaint against the Santa Barbara County Board of Supervisors as a whole and its members individually seeking to prevent their approval of a memorandum of agreement with the Santa Ynez Band of Chumash Indians." The lawsuit involves "the 1,427-acre Camp 4 property east of Highway 154 and west of Highway 246 that was purchased by the Chumash tribe in 2010 with the intent of building tribal housing, a community center and other improvements." The Bureau of Indian Affairs, at the tribe's request, "issued a decision to take the land into trust, which would allow the tribe to develop the property outside the jurisdiction of county and state laws, result in a loss of tax revenues to the county and fail to compensate the county for services provided." The lawsuit alleges the tribe's proposed development "of 415 residences and a 12,000-square-foot community center fails to meet all provisions of the Santa Ynez Valley Community Plan, which the supervisors have admitted."

Bill To Build Grand Canyon Tram Goes Before Navajo Lawmakers.

The AP (10/25) reports the Navajo Nation Council will review legislation to build an aerial tram into the Grand Canyon during Tuesday's special session. The legislation "has struggled to gain widespread support." Developers claim it will "revitalize the region's economy," but opponents argue "it would desecrate the area." The Navajo Nation would need to invest $65 million to start the project.

Navajo Nation 'Rejects' DOJ Move Not To Prosecute Ex-Officer.

The AP (10/24) reports from Tse Bonito, NM that "the Navajo Nation says it's angered by a U.S. Justice Department decision not to prosecute a former Winslow, Arizona, officer who fatally shot a 27-year-old Navajo woman." Navajo Nation Attorney General Ethel Branch said on Tuesday "the tribe is planning to sue over the matter early next year. The tribe had asked the Justice Department to look into the March 2016 shooting of Loreal Tsingine." Justice Department spokesman Devin O'Malley said on Tuesday that "the evidence thoroughly was reviewed but officials couldn't prove beyond a reasonable doubt that Austin Shipley willfully used excessive force when he shot Tsingine."

Poll: Utah Voters Divided On Future Of Two National Monuments.

The Hill (10/24, Henry) reports a poll released Tuesday by the Salt Lake Tribune and the University of Utah found 51 percent of respondents supported shrinking the Bears Ears National Monument. However, 53 percent of voters “also said the Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument should be preserved and not split into smaller monuments, something supported by 27 percent of those polled.” Bear Ears and Grand Staircase-Escalante are two of nearly 30 large national monuments that the Interior Department is considering changes for. Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke “has said he will recommend President Trump shrink Bears Ears, a 1.3-million acre expanse established by the Obama administration late last year containing cultural sites from Native American tribes.” Zinke is also expected to “recommend Trump shrink Grand Staircase-Escalante, a 1.8-million acre monument established by President Clinton in 1996.”

2 In Nevada Standoff Case Take Plea Deals, Avoid 3rd Trial.

The AP (10/24) reports two defendants pleaded guilty to lesser charges to “avoid a third trial and the possibility of more time in federal custody for bearing assault-style weapons during a 2014 confrontation with federal agents near a ranch owned by Nevada cattleman and states’ rights figure Cliven Bundy.” According to the AP, their plea deals “narrow the focus of an upcoming trial for Bundy, two adult sons and a close associate,” who are accused of “leading a conspiracy to enlist a self-styled militia to prevent federal Bureau of Land Management agents from enforcing court orders to remove Bundy cattle from desert rangeland in what is now Gold Butte National Monument.”

Sources that picked up AP reporting includes Albuquerque \(NM\) Journal (10/24), Minneapolis \(MN\) Star Tribune (10/19), Salt Lake \(UT\) Tribune (10/24) and U.S. News & World Report (10/24).

Federal Land Manager To Idaho National Guard: Stop Building.

The AP (10/24, Boone) reports the Bureau of Land Management sent a formal cease and desist letter ordering the Idaho National Guard to cease construction of a “tank crossing on a road in a national conservation area in the state until an environmental analysis is finished and the BLM decides whether to grant a permit.” Both sides called the issue a “rare misunderstanding in a long-standing positive relationship in the area that contains key habitat for eagles, falcons and hawks.” BLM’s Snake River Birds of Prey Manager Amanda Hoffman said in an email, “The Guard is an active and positive partner with the BLM in their environmental stewardship of the Orchard Combat Training Center.”

BLM Pulls Plan To Auction Oil And Gas Lease Near Shenandoah.

The Durango \(CO\) Herald (10/24, Romeo) reports a spokesman with the Bureau of Land Management said the agency has pulled a 40-acre tract on the southern border of the Shenandoah subdivision from an oil and gas lease sale set for March in response to “public backlash earlier this month when Shenandoah residents said the agency did not properly notify them of the sale or a public comment period.” The potential development of the land “also drew concern over noise, traffic and general health risks associated with nearby oil and gas development.”

The AP (10/24) also reports on this story.

Enviros Warn Of No More Parks; Critics Say ‘Ridiculous.’

In a 2,500-word piece, E&E Publishing (10/24, Yachnin) reports critics of House Natural Resources Chairman Rob Bishop’s legislation to overhaul the Antiquities Act claim it will not only “mandate strict guidelines for the creation of national monuments but would lessen the chances for new national parks in the decades ahead.” Bishop “has dismissed such correlations as unfounded.” Before a Natural Resources panel passed the bill along party lines earlier this month, Bishop stated, “The idea that Grand Canyon or Zion National Park would never have been created without this is misinformation.” However, conservation advocates “have seized on that data to argue that Bishop’s new legislation would have prevented the creation of sites like the former Grand Canyon and Arches national monuments, and potentially derailed the process through which those lands became national parks.”

Trump’s ‘Energy Independence’ Order: Where Do Things Stand?

E&E Publishing (10/24) reports that this month, the Trump administration “hit two milestones in their wide-ranging examination of Obama-era rules” that could be considered burdensome to U.S. energy producers. EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt “formally proposed a repeal of the Clean Power Plan” just days after the Bureau of Land Management “unveiled its plan to postpone key parts of a rule the Obama administration introduced to limit venting, flaring and leakage of natural gas from energy operations on public and tribal lands.” President Trump is also credited with disbanding “an interagency working group that focused on the social cost of carbon and related tools that put a dollar amount on the impacts of carbon, nitrous oxide and methane.”

Developers Plan Wind Farms Off Jersey as Christie Era Ends.

Bloomberg News (10/24, Ryan) reports, “after years of being sidelined by New Jersey Governor Chris Christie, wind farm developers are dusting off plans for massive offshore turbines that may someday generate more electricity than a nuclear reactor.” As governor, Christie “effectively blocked wind farms off his state’s coast by never fully implementing a program that would subsidize the projects.” Bloomberg writes that Christie’s departure “presents a potentially rich market for offshore wind,” with low power prices and a geographical position “midway between offshore wind development sites in New England and the Southeast, making the state a potential hub for ferrying supplies to build projects in other states.” The article quotes US Wind Director of Project Development Paul Rich, “New Jersey has all the classic elements for offshore wind to work. The time is right, and the market is ripe.”

California Makes Critical Repairs In Century-Old Levee System.

The Salem \(OR\) Capital Press (10/24, Hearden) reports California water agencies spent $80 million this summer to repair “30 of the most critically impaired levees after last winter’s rains, but there were 10 others that they couldn’t get to, officials said.” According to the Capital Press, a “sense of urgency prevailed this summer after high river levels during a historically wet winter exposed weak spots in roughly 1,600 miles of levees in the Central Valley." Among the most troubled areas "is the Feather River below the Oroville Dam, whose spillways nearly failed in February."

Texas Researchers Hope Grants Will Stop Spread Of Disease Threatening State's Bats.

The Houston Chronicle (10/24, Stuckey) reports that the National Fish and Wildlife Foundation on Tuesday announced the award of $1.3 million in grant funding for six initiatives to halt the spread of white nose syndrome, which "has killed millions of North American bats." Around $600,000 will fund projects in Texas, where researchers just recently discovered the first incidence of the disease. Southern Company is listed among the partners that funded the grants. The AP (10/24) also covers the announcement of the grant funding from the "Bats for the Future Fund," which "includes the National Fish and Wildlife Foundation, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, U.S. Forest Service, Shell Oil and Southern Co."

Fish And Wildlife Police Seize Pot On Hanford Reach National Monument.

The Tri-City Herald \(WA\) (10/24, Cary) reports officials seized a marijuana crop on the Hanford Reach National Monument. A US Fish and Wildlife Service scientist "surprised a person carrying a weapon earlier this month in a remote area north of the Columbia River near Saddle Mountain Lake, an area that is closed to the public." The Washington State Department of Fish and Wildlife "responded to what initially was suspected of being an illegal hunt," but instead found an active marijuana growing operation where 200 to 300 plants "had been harvested, dried and prepared for transportation, according to officers."

Fishermen, Researchers Try To Outsmart Bait-Robbing Seabirds To Save Them.

NW News Network (10/23, Banse) reports researchers from Oregon and Washington published a report recommending the best tactics to avoid bycatch, particularly endangered species such as the short-tailed albatross. The report "recommends either fishing at night or deploying bird-scaring streamers on a line towed from a mast." The US Fish and Wildlife Service, citing the research, "recently directed regulators at NOAA Fisheries to require the West Coast longline fleet use one of the two options.” According to a FWS report published earlier this year, “there has been one confirmed case of a short-tailed albatross being killed in longline gear since 2002 off the Oregon, Washington and California coasts.”

Losing Lake Powell’s Quagga Mussel Invasion Battle, But Trying To Win The War.

The Arizona Daily Sun (10/22, Gardner) reports on the futile attempts by researchers over a decade to keep adult quagga mussels from taking over Lake Powell. Experts believe it is “impossible to entirely eradicate the” invasive species from taking over Lake Powell. According to the article, the “mussels latch on to the walls of Glen Canyon Dam and the hundreds of boats skimming the lake’s waters.” More than $1 million each year has been spent on containment efforts since researchers first discovered the invading mussels. Organizations in the surrounding states are “working together on containment efforts that include inspecting boats, educating boaters [about] the infestation, bolstering staff, levying costly fines to uncooperative boaters and investing in decontamination equipment.”

Celebrity Ambassadors Put Lesser-Known U.S. National Parks In The Limelight.

The Washington Post (10/23, Sachs) reports that for its 101th birthday, the National Parks Service and National Park Foundation “launched Parks 101, an ongoing online series that will introduce the masses to lesser-known destinations within the 417-site system.” The goal of the series is to encourage visitors to start attending its minor locations. “The places that are iconic are well worth visiting,” said Will Shafroth, president and chief executive of the foundation, “but we wanted to spark interest in the places that hardly anyone knows about.” He explained the series includes videos and social media posts by celebrity ambassadors and focuses on destinations that offer a diversity of experiences.

Burt’s Bees Cofounder On Why She Gave Away 87,000 Acres In Maine.

Forbes (10/24, Wang) reports that Roxanne Quimby, the co-founder of lip balms and lotions manufacturer

Burt's Bee, used her fortune to purchase "thousands of acres of land across the country, aiming to preserve the land rather than develop it." Last year, Quimby "donated roughly $75 million worth of her holdings to the National Park Service – over 87,000 acres overall – and $6 million to other causes." As part of her entrepreneurship, Quimby "learned about a problem in national parks called inholding – parcels of privately-held land sitting inside of government-owned parks." As a result, she "decided to allocate $10 million towards a project that will buy up then donate inholdings in various parks in the U.S." When NPS' 100th anniversary occurred in 2016, she "turned over $10 million worth of inholdings (150 acres in all) she acquired over the years to the federal government, and donated around 87,500 acres of land in Maine to create a national monument called Katahdin Woods and Waters."

Park Service Cancels Funding For Project 'Honoring Legacy' of Black Panther Party.

The Washington Free Beacon (10/24, Harrington) reports the National Park Service said it will no longer provide funding for a project "honoring the legacy" of the Black Panther Party after the agency was criticized for spending taxpayer money on the controversial group. NPS said in the grant awarded for the project, "Committed to truthfully honoring the legacy of [Black Panther Party] BPP activists and the San Francisco Bay Area communities they served, the project seeks to document the lives of activists and elders and the landscapes that shaped the movement."

Help Support National Parks.

The Reading \(PA\) Eagle (10/25, Banowetz) reports Brooks Sports continues to support the US National Park System "with the introduction of its National Parks Collection, a series of its Cascadia 12 trail running shoes, socks and T-shirts that raise money for the National Park Service." Interested runners can select from "special editions of the shoe that are designed to honor Yellowstone, Yosemite, Mount Rainier and Great Smoky Mountain National Park, and a technical T-shirt designed for each of those parks is also available." Five percent of the wholesale cost of each item will be donated to the NPS.

Wild Burros Raft Grand Canyon Rapids.

The Southwest Colorado Journal (10/24, Mimiaga)

reports on the story of the National Park Service transporting wild burros on rafts or by helicopter out of Grand Canyon in 1980-81. Back then, the NPS "had long wanted to get rid of the growing burro population in the Grand Canyon because they competed with native wildlife for grazing lands." The "unconventional round-up" of the beasts of burden "involved custom-built rafts with corrals and ramps, professional boaters."

Guam Delegate Suggests Options To Save Chamorro Land Trust.

The AP (10/24) reports Guam Del. Madeleine Bordallo "has proposed five options to save the Chamorro Land Trust program, which has been challenged in court by the federal government." According to the Pacific Daily News, the US Department of Justice lawsuit claims the local government violated the federal Fair Housing Act "for discriminating against non-Chamorros." The program "aims to hold public land for indigenous Chamorros, who can lease 1-acre tracts for $1 a year for 99 years. The Land Trust Commission also leases land for commercial use to non-Chamorros." The AP explains the Federal government "sued after a Caucasian Tamuning resident earlier this year filed a complaint with federal housing officials, stating he was prohibited from applying for a lease under the Chamorro Land Trust."

100-Year Floods Prompt Drone Visit At Historic Site.

The Torrington \(WY\) Telegram (10/24, Albers) reports that after experiencing 100-year flood events the past two years, Fort Laramie National Historic Site superintendent Tom Baker reached out for help. Don Weeks, physical resources program manager for the Intermountain Region of the National Park Service, recalled Baker asking, "Is this the new normal? I think what I need is some sort of river management plan." To assist in the flood management planning, the team turned to Mark Bauer and Todd Burton of the US Geological Survey's Unmanned Aircraft Systems Project Office. Project planning started in February, “and last week, Bauer and Burton brought an $80,000 drone to the park – complete with an estimated $70,000 LiDAR payload.” According to the Telegram, Bauer and Burton “completed a total of 11 flights, most of which were at 150 feet above ground level, with a few flights at 400 feet above ground level.” Bauer estimated “USGS will take a few weeks to process and deliver its findings back to the National Park Service, which will then perform additional data analysis and begin making flood plain management decisions.”

Pasadena Earthquake Expert Kenneth Hudnut to Receive National Award for Service, Leadership in Geodesy.

Pasadena \(CA\) Now (10/24) reports USGS geophysicist Kenneth Hudnut was chosen to receive the 2017 Ivan I. Mueller Award for Distinguished Service and Leadership at the 2017 American Geophysical Union Fall Meeting this December in New Orleans. The award acknowledges “major achievements in service to and/or leadership within the field of geodesy.” According to the article, Hudnut “applies new technologies such as GPS and lidar (light detection and ranging) to earthquake research as a geophysicist for the USGS in Pasadena.”

How Will ‘Really Big One’ Earthquake Shake Out? Researchers Run 50 Simulations.

The Oregonian (10/24) reports a University of Washington research project ran 50 simulations on how a massive earthquake could disrupt the Northwest. The simulations used combinations “of three factors: The quake’s epicenter, how far inland it would rupture and which parts of the fault would produce the most intense shaking, according to the university.” Erin Wirth, a postdoctoral researcher who led the project, explained in a statement, “There had been just a handful of detailed simulations of a magnitude-9 Cascadia earthquake, and it was hard to know if they were showing the full range. With just a few simulations you didn’t know if you were seeing a best-case, a worst-case or an average scenario. This project has really allowed us to be more confident in saying that we’re seeing the full range of possibilities.”

Largest US Grid Operator Rips Perry Plan To Subsidize Coal, Nuclear Power.

The AP (10/24, Levy) reports that PJM Interconnection, the nation's largest electric grid operator, "said a Trump administration plan to change the way electricity is priced to reward coal and nuclear power is both unworkable and potentially against the law." PJM operates the grid "covering 65 million people from Illinois to Washington, D.C." It "submitted formal comments on the plan late Monday to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission." PJM's president and CEO, Andy Ott said in a conference call with reporters, Energy Secretary Rick Perry's plan is not "workable." In fact, Ott added, "we do believe it's contrary to law and, again, will not really solve any problems." PJM "said the plan would undermine the reliability of markets, intrude on state policies and represent a radical departure from the commission's policies."

Bloomberg News (10/23, Traywick) reports PJM Interconnection CEO Andrew Ott, said, "I don't know how this proposal could be implemented without a detrimental impact on the market," adding that Perry's proposal is "discriminatory" and inconsistent with federal law. Ott's remarks "echo concerns raised by other grid operators, which on Monday asked the commission to reject Perry's proposal. The New York Independent System Operator, ISO New England and the Midcontinent Independent System Operator filed comments jointly with a coalition of organizations that wouldn't be affected," including the "Electric Reliability Council of Texas, the California Independent System Operator, and the Southwest Power Pool." In their comments the group said, "The proposal threatens to undermine price formation and competition in the nation's organized electricity markets."

EnergyWire (10/24, Kuckro) reports that Ott "said PJM...has been discussing for a year 'the need to properly value' reliability in the context of energy price formation." Ott said, "A better and least-cost solution would be to do proper valuation of resource attributes through a market construct rather than the proposed approach to do a regulatory construct." Ott said that providing compensation to a "subset of generators" is "discriminatory in the sense that it tries to differentiate between resources providing very similar or the same services to the grid." Ott added, "We think it is discriminatory and inconsistent with the Federal Power Act."

The Cleveland Plain Dealer (10/24, Funk) reports that the trade groups “counter that there is just no evidence that allowing the old plants to shut down and retire would in any way weaken the reliability of the high-voltage grid, echoing an earlier PJM analysis that the grid it manages in Ohio and 12 other states would be fine if 86 percent of the power came from gas turbines.” Crain’s Cleveland Business (10/24) reports that even though the “rule appears to target PJM specifically,” Ott said, “the PJM market is more diverse and reliable today than we’ve seen.”

Tesla Urges FERC To Drop Coal, Nuclear Subsidy Plan. Bloomberg News (10/23, Doan) reports that Elon Musk’s Tesla Inc. “waded into an intensifying debate” this week over whether US coal and nuclear plants “should be paid for their ability to supply around-the-clock power.” Last month, Energy Secretary Rick Perry outlined a plan to “create special payments for plants capable of stockpiling 90 days’ worth of fuel at their sites.” In a filing to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission Monday, “Tesla urged the agency to dismiss Perry’s proposal, saying it ‘completely excludes the benefits of energy storage and distributed energy resources.’” Tesla instead urged the agency to “reprioritize” its efforts to “allow for more energy storage to compete in wholesale power markets” and “criticized Perry’s plan for ‘pre-determining’ the kinds of resources that should receive payments.”

Even Some Coal Generators Lukewarm To Perry Plan. Bloomberg News (10/24, Traywick) reports that while some coal generators including Dynegy Inc., are “poised to profit from Energy Secretary Rick Perry’s plan to change power market rules” – that “doesn’t mean they’ve thrown their full support behind it.” Dynegy, “with about 9.5 gigawatts of coal-fired capacity, went as far as to file comments opposing it.” Dynegy said, “Even from the perspective of a coal generator, the proposed rule should not be adopted because it would substantially, and potentially irreversibly, harm the nation’s competitive electricity markets.” NRG Energy, with “nearly 9 gigawatts of coal capacity” and Entergy Corp., with 2.2 gigawatts of coal capacity “also urged the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to proceed with caution.”

Senate Dems Question Why Unconfirmed EPA Nominee Dourson Is Already Working.

The Washington Examiner (10/24, Siegel) reports that Democratic senators want to know why Michael Dourson, President Trump's unconfirmed nominee to lead the EPA's toxic chemicals office, is already working at the agency as a top advisor to Administrator Scott Pruitt. In a letter, the senators wrote, "Your appointment creates the appearance, and perhaps the effect, of circumventing the Senate's constitutional advice and consent responsibility for the position to which you have been nominated."

Trump Order Allows Refugee Admittance, Imposes Stricter Vetting.

Bloomberg News (10/24, Sink) reports President Trump "has ended his ban on admitting refugees to the US but will enact stricter vetting procedures for them, administration officials said." The Washington Times (10/24, Dinan) says the "new restrictions" will be imposed on "refugees from 11 mostly-Muslim target countries," who officials said "still pose too much of a danger to be admitted without a compelling national interest." Trump "issued a new executive order re-starting general worldwide refugee processing, updating the policy after a 120-day pause he ordered earlier this year as part of his "extreme vetting" policy."

The Washington Post (10/24, Miroff) reports "Administration officials said the State Department took the lead in developing the new vetting procedures, along with the Department of Homeland Security and the Office of the Director of National Intelligence." These "new rules do not adjust the number of refugees the United States will accept in the next 12 months, which Trump has limited to 45,000, the lowest level since the Refugee Act was created in 1980." USA Today (10/24, Korte) reports "acting Secretary of Homeland Security Elaine Duke said the new screening measures 'provide an opportunity for the United States to welcome those in need into our country, while ensuring a safer, more secure homeland.'" Reuters (10/24, Torbati, Rosenberg) indicates that according to a memo seen by Reuters, sent by the Administration to Congress on Tuesday "ahead of the government announcement on new refugee vetting measures, the administration also will place on hold a program that allows for family reunification for some refugees resettled in the United States."

The New York Times (10/24, Baker, Liptak) reports "refugee advocates said the new order is objectionable, noting that refugee applicants were already carefully screened and that no American has been killed in a terrorist attack by a refugee in the current era of concern over foreign-sponsored terrorism dating to the Sept. 11 attacks." The Wall Street Journal (10/24, Meckler, Harris), which broke the story about the new rules, quotes Eric Schwartz, President of Refugees International, who ran the refugee program at the State Department during the Obama Administration, as saying, "My fear and my expectation is that this will not be heightened scrutiny but rather an outright ban against refugees that have represented a majority of those coming into the United States in recent years."

In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/24) defends the concept of increasing scrutiny of would-be refugees, but worries that the new policy seems to have a different aim: to reduce their number. To the Journal, that may reflect the government's lack of confidence in its inability to properly identify potential terrorists from the pool of asylum applicants.

Supreme Court Dismisses Last Remaining Travel Ban Appeal. The New York Times (10/24, Liptak) reports that the Supreme Court on Tuesday dismissed "the last remaining appeal in a pair of cases challenging President Trump's executive order, issued in March, that sought to limit travel to the United States." The March order was replaced in September with broader restrictions that have "already been blocked by federal district courts in Hawaii and Maryland," so Tuesday's dismissal "mostly amounted to judicial housekeeping, clearing out challenges to the March order as the justices await eventual appeals from the one issued in September." In its brief, unsigned disposition, the court said the March order had expired, "making the case moot."

Reuters (10/24, Hurley) notes "the justices had been scheduled to hear arguments in the two consolidated on Oct. 10." The Washington Examiner (10/24, Lovelace), The Hill (10/24, Wheeler) and Daily Caller (10/24, Daley), among other news outlets, also report the story.

The Washington Times (10/24, Dinan, Noble) reports, meanwhile, that "the Trump administration on Tuesday filed a notice that [it] intends to appeal the Hawaii judge's ruling to the 9th US Circuit Court of Appeals." Hawaii Attorney General Doug Chin, "who filed the case, said 'we stand ready to defend it.'"

Costs Of Security For EPA Administrator On The Rise.

The Hill (10/24, Shelbourne) reports that according to a report by CNN the Environmental Protection Agency's "security expenses" are rising to "an unprecedented level." The agency "is adding security personnel for its administrator, Scott Pruitt, the report said, citing more threats against him than individuals who held the Cabinet position in prior administrations." The Hill adds, "Salaries for Pruitt's security personnel will total $2 million alone, the network calculated." EPA spokeswoman Liz Bowman said, "We decline to comment on security measures taken months ago to protect the administrator."

Ross: Congress Will Work Out Details Of Tax Reform Plan.

The Washington Times (10/24, Persons) reports Commerce Secretary Ross "said Tuesday that details of President Trump's tax plan need to be 'ironed out.'" Ross told Bloomberg Daybreak, "What the president put forward is a framework. It's a conceptual framework. It's his objectives. ... But there are lots and lots of details to be ironed out, and that, very appropriately, is the work of Congress."

Reuters/Ipsos Poll: Fewer Than Third Support Trump Tax Plan.

Reuters (10/24, Becker, Kahn) reports "fewer than a third of Americans support Donald Trump's tax-cut plan, according to a Reuters/Ipsos poll released on Tuesday." Moreover, "the poll found that more than two-thirds of registered voters said reducing the US federal budget deficit is more important than cutting taxes for the wealthy or for corporations." Reuters adds that "Trump's plan would balloon the deficit and add to the $20 trillion national debt, according to critics and independent analysts."

NYTimes Analysis: Climate Change Causing Fluctuations In Europe's Olive Oil Production.

The New York Times (10/24, Sengupta) reports, "The heat wave that swept across southern Europe this summer, which scientists say bore the fingerprints of human-induced climate change," has transformed the olive oil industry "into an increasingly risky business – at least in the Mediterranean, the land of its birth." Rabobank analyst Vito Martielli credited the bad harvests in three of the last five years to what he “called weather-related ‘shocks.’” While vacillations in the olive oil supply may not impact global hunger, the Times says, “the impact of climate change on such a hardy and high-end product is a measure of how global warming is beginning to challenge how we grow food.”

Industry Representatives Lobby Senators To Preserve NAFTA.

The New York Times (10/24, Swanson, Kitroeff) reports that more than “130 representatives” from the automotive, retail, and other industries “stormed Capitol Hill on Tuesday in an extraordinary show of force against a Republican president they fear will cripple or kill the North American Free Trade Agreement.” The industry representatives “met with senators on Tuesday to ratchet up pressure on lawmakers — many of whose constituents work for companies dependent on Nafta — to keep the deal intact.” Tuesday’s effort, which was organized by the US Chamber of Commerce, comes as Administration proposals to rewrite the agreement “have triggered alarm bells among automakers, retailers, agricultural companies and other businesses, who say the provisions the United States is pushing are ‘poison pills’ that would hurt American companies and jobs.”

In an op-ed for the Wall Street Journal (10/24), Jim Bair, president of the US Apple Association, argues that while President Trump has called NAFTA the “worst trade deal ever made,” the US apple industry has thrived under the agreement. Terminating it, he writes, could result in a large tariff on exported apples and reduced earnings for apple growers and their employees.

Bureau Of Labor Statistics: Manufacturing Job Market Will Further Decline In Next Decade.

The New York Times (10/24, Casselman) reports that according to a study by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, “a decade from now, the American economy could look much the way it does today — only more so,” increasingly “dominated by the service sector amid the continued erosion of manufacturing jobs.” It will also be “more polarized in both earnings and geography,” and “more tilted toward jobs that require at least a bachelor’s degree.” The Washington Free Beacon (10/24, Meyer) notes the study also found “employment is projected to grow by 11.5 million from..156,100,000 to 167,600,000, an increase of 0.7 percent. This is greater than the 0.5 percent growth seen in the previous decade from 2006 through 2016, which included the recession that began in December 2007."

"Public Art Takes Flight." A New York Times (10/24) editorial.

Washington Post.

"Jeff Flake's Diagnosis Is Right But It's Not Enough." The Washington Post (10/24) says in an editorial that conservatives may be "chastened by [Sen. Jeff Flake's] example." Republicans "who fancy themselves true conservatives...should stand up against Mr. Trump's noxious politics" But they must also "fashion an agenda and a political style that can compete successfully in primaries against Trumpism. Until they do, all the eloquence in the world will not be enough."

"Interpol Should Not Be Abused As Putin's Tool Of Revenge." A Washington Post (10/24) editorial says Interpol "has been attempting to halt abuse of the red-notice system," but argues that the reform effort "needs to run deeper and guard against politicization of the Interpol diffusion notices, too. The United States should also be on guard against diffusion notices intended to silence dissent. It is wrong to allow Mr. Putin's vengeful rants to be translated into action. Magnitsky's legacy is that violations of human rights will not be tolerated, and those who speak out will not be silenced."

"The Government Needs To Get Its Act Together In Puerto Rico." The Washington Post (10/24) editorializes that in contrast to the situation in Texas and Florida, "more than a month after Maria made landfall on" Puerto Rico "roughly 8 out of 10 residents are still without power." While "the sorry, preexisting state of Puerto Rico's power system...clearly accounts for some of the delay...that doesn't excuse the bad planning and questionable decisions that have marked the response to a calamity that was so clearly anticipated." To the Post, "giving a no-bid $300 million contract to a company that had just two full-time employees on the day Maria struck is, at best, curious and deserving of more scrutiny."

Wall Street Journal.

“A Bipartisan Drug Cartel?” A Wall Street Journal (10/24) editorial takes issue with a Washington Post and “60 Minutes” investigation which implied that the Ensuring Patient Access and Effective Drug Enforcement Act, which was sponsored by Rep. Tom Marino, who recently withdrew from consideration to be director of ONDCP, ended the DEA’s authority to go after illegal shipments of prescription drugs, noting that the main source for the story was former DEA official Joe Rannazzisi who is now a consultant for lawyers suing the opioid industry.

“Terrorists And Travel.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/24) defends the concept of increasing scrutiny of would-be refugees, but worries that the new policy seems to have a different aim: To reduce their number. To the Journal, that may reflect the government’s lack of confidence in its inability to properly identify potential terrorists from the pool of asylum applicants.

“Illinois’s Latest Criminals.” In an editorial, the Wall Street Journal (10/24) criticizes Illinois State Senate Democrats and seven Republicans for voting to override Gov. Bruce Rauner’s veto of the “Collective Bargaining Freedom Act,” which bans right-to-work zones in the state and threatens officials who enact them with a class-A misdemeanor.

Last Laughs

Late Night Political Humor.

Jimmy Kimmel: "Donald Trump's merchandise team is trying to make Halloween great again. For real."

They have a new hat. ... The hat goes for $45. It is already sold out. Like the Trump Administration, it is only available for a limited time."

Stephen Colbert: "You might recall that [Sen. Bob] Corker called the White House 'an adult daycare center.' Okay, clever, but not entirely accurate. With Trump, you also need a night shift."

Stephen Colbert: "It came out that [Bill] O'Reilly settled a sixth sexual harassment claim, paying $32 million to a longtime Fox News analyst for, among other things, allegedly sending her gay pornography. But because it was from Bill O'Reilly, all of those gay porn stars said 'Merry Christmas' before coming down your chimney."

James Corden: "In a series of tweets, Trump called Corker a 'lightweight.' He called him 'incompetent,' and he mocked his height by once again calling him 'Little Bob Corker.' So, looks like the First Lady's anti-bullying initiative still has a ways to go."

James Corden: "At one point, Corker told reporters that Trump's legacy will be, 'the debasement of our nation.' Yeah, debasement. As in, when Trump starts a war, I'll be hiding in the-basement."

Jimmy Fallon: "Republican Senator Jeff Flake announced that he will not seek reelection and said the GOP was headed in the wrong direction. Or as Trump calls it, 'Flake news.'"

Seth Meyers: "A protester posing as a journalist threw Russian flags at President Trump as he arrived at the Capitol today and shouted, 'Trump is treason!' Then she went back to her book tour."

Seth Meyers: "Tomorrow is Ivanka Trump and Jared Kushner's eighth wedding anniversary. If you're wondering what to get them, how about out? Get them out."

Conan O'Brien: "President Trump and Bob Corker are in a feud after Corker compared the White House to a daycare center. When they heard this, 3-year-olds everywhere said, 'Oh, no, do not lump us in with that guy.'"

Conan O'Brien: "Bill O'Reilly revealed that he is mad at God for putting him through his sexual harassment scandal. Today, God refused to comment."

Conan O'Brien: "A California elementary school was under fire for putting up a Donald Trump scarecrow. Even worse, 30 percent of the crows still think that Trump scarecrow is doing a great job."
